This edition owes much in its content and style to the eighth edition of the Concise Oxford Dictionary edited by Dr Robert Allen, who also revised the etymologies for this dictionary.

Guide to the Use of the Dictionary

1. Headword

1.1 The headword is printed in bold type, or in bold italic type if the word is not naturalized in English and is usually found in italics in printed matter.

1.2 Variant spellings are given before the definition (e.g. cabby n. (also cabbie)); in all such cases the form given as the headword is the preferred form. When the variant form is alphabetically remote from the main form it is given at its proper place in the dictionary (e.g. caiman var. of CAYMAN).

1.3 Words that are different but spelt the same way (homographs) are distinguished by superior figures (e.g. bat¹ and bat²).

1.4 Words that are normally spelt with a capital initial are given in this form as the headword; when they are in some senses spelt with a small initial and in others with a capital initial this is indicated by repetition of the full word in the appropriate form within the entry (as at carboniferous).

1.5 Variant American spellings are indicated by the designation US (e.g. favour. . . US favor).

2. Pronunciation

Guidance on pronunciation follows the system of the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). Only the pronunciation standard in southern England is given. A key to the symbols used appears on page xiv.

3. Part-of-speech label

3.1 This is given for all main entries and derivatives.

3.2 Different parts of speech of a single word are listed separately.

3.3 Verbs, whether transitive, intransitive, or both, are given the simple designation v. The designation absol. (absolute) denotes use with an implied object (as at abdicate).

4. Inflection

4.1 Plurals of Nouns:

Nouns that form their plural regularly by adding -s (or -es when they end in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch), receive no comment. Plural forms of those ending in -o (preceded by any letter other than another o) are always given. Other irregular forms are also given, except when the word is a compound of obvious formation (e.g. footman, schoolchild).

4.2 Forms of Verbs:

4.2.1 The following regular forms receive no comment:

- (i) third person singular present forms adding -s to the stem (or -es to stems ending in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch).
- (ii) past tenses and past participles adding -ed to the stem.

4.2.2 A doubled consonant in verbal inflexions (e.g. rubbed, rubbing, sinned, sinning) is shown in the form (-bb-, -nn-, etc.). Where practice differs in American usage this is noted (as at cavil).

4.3 Comparative and Superlative of Adjectives and Adverbs:
The following regular forms receive no comment:

4.3.1 Words of one syllable adding -er and -est (e.g. greater, greatest).

4.3.2 Words of one syllable ending in silent e, which drop the e and add -er and -est (e.g. braver, bravest).

5. Definition

5.1 Definitions are listed in order of comparative familiarity and importance, with the most current and important senses first.

5.2 They are separated by a number, or by a letter when the two senses are more closely related.

5.3 Round brackets enclose letters or words that are optional (as at crash v. where '(cause to) make a loud smashing noise' can mean either 'make a loud smashing noise' or 'cause to make a loud smashing noise'), and indicate typical objects of transitive verbs (such as 'milk' and 'the skin' in two senses of cream v.).

6. Subject and Usage labels

6.1 These are used to clarify the particular context in which a word or phrase is normally used.

6.2 Words and phrases more common in informal spoken English than in formal written English are labelled colloq. (colloquial) or slang as appropriate.

6.3 Some subject labels are used to indicate the particular relevance of a term or subject with which it is associated (e.g. Mus., Law, Physics). They are not used when this is sufficiently clear from the definition itself.

6.4 Two categories of deprecated usage are indicated by special markings: coarse slang indicates a word that, although widely found, is still unacceptable to many people; offens. (offensive) indicates a use that is regarded as offensive by members of a particular ethnic, religious, or other group.

6.5 Usage notes found at the end of entries give guidance on the current norms of standard English. Some of the rules given may legitimately be broken in less formal English, and especially in conversation.

7. Phrases

Phrases are listed in alphabetical order after the treatment of the main word. The words a, the, one, and person do not count for purposes of alphabetical order.

8. Compounds

8.1 Compound terms forming one word (e.g. bathroom, jellyfish) are listed as main entries, as are those consisting of two or more words (e.g. chain reaction) or joined by a hyphen (e.g. chain-gang).

8.2 When a hyphenated compound in bold type is divided at the end of a line the hyphen is repeated at the beginning of the next line to show that it is a permanent feature of the spelling and not just an end-of-line hyphen.

9. Derivatives

9.1 Words formed by adding a suffix to another word are in many cases listed at the end of the entry for the main word (e.g. chalkiness and chalky at chalk). In this position they are not defined since they can be understood from the sense of the main word and that given at the suffix concerned; when further definition is called for they are given main entries in their own right (e.g. changeable).

9.2 For reasons of space words formed by certain suffixes are not always included except when some special feature of spelling or pronunciation or meaning is involved. These suffixes are -ABLE, -ER¹ (in the sense '. . .that does'), -ER² and -EST (see also 4.3), -ISH, -LESS, -LIKE, -LY², and -NESS.

10. Etymology

10.1 This is given in square brackets [] at the end of the entry. In the space available it can only give the direct line of derivation in outline. Forms in other languages are not given if they are exactly or nearly the same as the English form.

10.2 'Old English' is used for words that are known to have been used before AD 1150.

10.3 'Anglo-French' denotes the variety of French current in England in the Middle Ages after the Norman Conquest.

10.4 'Latin' denotes classical and Late Latin up to about AD 600; 'medieval Latin' that of the period about 600–1500; 'Anglo-Latin' denotes Latin as used in medieval England.

10.5 Where the origin of a word cannot be reliably ascertained, the form 'origin uncertain' or 'origin unknown' is used.

10.6 Names of the rarer languages that have contributed to English (such as Balti at polo, and Cree at wapiti) are given in full without explanation; they may be found explained in larger dictionaries or in encyclopedias.

10.7 An etymology is not given when it is identical in essentials with that of a neighbouring entry, when the word is an abbreviation or compound of obvious formation (such as bathroom), or when the derivation is clear from the definition (as at burgundy).

11. Prefixes and Suffixes

11.1 A large selection of these is given in the main body of the text; prefixes are given in the form ex-, re-, etc., and suffixes in the form -ion, -ness, etc. These entries should be consulted to explain the many derivatives given at the end of entries (see 9.1).

11.2 Prefixes and suffixes are not normally given a pronunciation since this can change considerably when they form part of a word.

12. Cross-Reference

12.1 Cross-reference to main entries is indicated by small capitals (e.g. calk US var. of CAULK; put a person wise see WISE).

12.2 Cross-reference in italics to a defined phrase or compound refers to the entry for the first word unless another is specified.

12.3 A homograph (see 1.3) is indicated by a superior figure (e.g. calves pl. of CALF¹, CALF²).

Note on Proprietary Status

This dictionary includes some words which are, or are asserted to be, proprietary names or trade marks. Their inclusion does not imply that they have acquired for legal purposes a non-proprietary or general significance, nor is any other judgement implied concerning their legal status. In cases where the editor has some evidence that a word is used as a proprietary name or trade mark this is indicated by the designation propr., but no judgement concerning the legal status of such words is made or implied thereby.

(ə) signifies the indeterminate sound as in garden, carnal, and rhythm.

(r) at the end of a word indicates an r that is sounded when a word beginning with a vowel follows, as in clutter up and an acre of land.

The mark ̃ indicates a nasalized sound, as in the following sounds that are not natural in English:

- ã (tímbre)
- ā (élan)
- õ (bon voyage)

The main or primary stress of a word is shown by ' preceding the relevant syllable; any secondary stress in words or phrases of three or more syllables is shown by , preceding the relevant syllable.
